'Luck' takes the familiar structure of dice – a system built to produce uncertainty – and reorganises it into a fixed sculptural form. The silver set presents all six possible outcomes simultaneously, with each number from one through six given permanent material presence.

What is usually encountered through a sequence of rolls appears here as a complete system, gathered into a single object. In this form, 'Luck' becomes a work about non-probability, where you control what you own and chance is translated into matter.

The set consists of six solid silver dice, conceived by Jack Butcher and produced with Asprey Studio. To house the edition, Butcher and SILK collaborated with Hanoia, the Vietnamese lacquer house, which produced a custom high-gloss black lacquer holder lined in black velvet and fitted to the dimensions of each die. The holder gives each number a fixed position and functions as an integral part of the artwork's spatial order and display.
